Not illustrated. 1875 Excerpt: .to sunday-school children generally, but it was too long to be repeated. It took effect immediately, and except wry faces and bodily contortions, the whole class was perfectly quiet for fully a minute and a half. I will now, said I, tell you about Daniel. He was a good man of the Jewish nation, who lived long long ago. He prayed three times a day, but bo had a great many enemies. They never prayed at all. Daniel prayed three times a day, but these wicked men not even once a day. Just in this connection I noticed that one of my scholars was standing up with his fingers placed over his eyes in the orthodox fashion praying! T called him to order and went on with my story. These bad men persuaded the king of the country to forbid Daniel to pray. Now what do you think? Did Daniel stop praying? (Unanimously) Yes, Daniel stopped praying. No, no, I cried, Daniel still prayed as usual three times a day. Hereupon one hopeful boy took the word out of my mouth, and promptly delivered an animated extempore eulogy upon Daniel s faithfulness in prayer. The substance of it was that the good old prophet prayed as often as he ate rice. I proceeded with the narration. The king himself loved Daniel, and was unwilling to put him to death; but because he had broken the law of the land, he gave orders that Daniel should be...
