Top of the Food Chain is a purely fictional account of one of the great mysteries of mankind. Each year thousands of individuals worldwide disappear without a trace. What if these disappearances were proven to be the result of extraterrestrials? What if the motives of this alien civilization were survival? Would the countries of the world unite to solve such a problem if the only areas that experienced abductions were poverty-stricken third world areas that are facing extreme over population? Who can answer questions like these? Mankind is a creature that has evolved into an intellectual life form because of a radical twist in his evolutionary path. The food chain that we depend upon is also a product of evolution. Any sudden change, whether by nature or by man, could force mankind to search for alternate food sources for survival. Who can predict the choices man would make when faced with starvation? While this story and all characters are purely fiction, the reader is encouraged to stop at intervals and try and decide what choices they might make if forced with the certainty of death. Our perspectives change greatly as would other life forms. The great distances in space...
